

Deeper thinking, better learning in Religious Education

30th January 2019, 9.30am – 3.00pm

Venue: Brockington College, Blaby Road, Enderby, Leicester, LE19 4AQ

This day long programme is open to all secondary schools, places are limited so early booking is recommended.

The day will be led by Stephen Pett from RE Today Services. Stephen is the series editor for RE Today's secondary curriculum books, is adviser to three local authorities, supporting the work of RE through SACRE consultancy and school-focused work, provides training and consultancy internationally. In addition Stephen led the development of Understanding Christianity: Text Impact Connections, a major resource supporting teachers in primary and secondary classrooms.

Key areas:

Handling big concepts in Christianity for GCSE: Salvation and life after death

You will explore resources, sources and classroom ideas to help students get to grips with big ideas.

Exploring non-religious worldviews

Using the latest data on atheism/agnosticism you will examine what being non-religious means – and support you in making the 'not bothered' an object of study in your classroom.

Active learning for deeper learning

Building on recent research, you'll consider some active strategies to help students think hard and learn lots.
