

Memory Recall Seminar

Implications of research for pupil and teacher learning - Memory

With James Siddle

James is the Director of Kyra Research School and the Head teacher at St Margaret's CE Primary School in Lincolnshire. Working with colleagues at the EEF and the Research School network, James produced core national programmes in memory and the science of learning and evaluation as well training on curriculum design and the teaching of vocabulary. James has led several teacher-led randomised control trials in an effort to answer some of the pressing questions teachers make on a day to day basis. He is also currently working with Lincoln University and the Wellcome Trust to develop an evidence-based support programme in Science for newly qualified teachers.
